The Need to Limit Plastic in Daily Life → 复习文章标题的大小号规则

Plastic products have become an essential part of modern life due to their low cost and convenience. However, increasing concerns about environmental damage have led to a growing debate on whether their use should be limited. While some people support continued use ^{of plastic} for practical reasons, others argue that restrictions are necessary to reduce pollution. In my view, plastic use should be limited gradually to balance convenience and environmental protection.

Plastic should be limited because it causes serious pollution. ^{不然和后面的句子连起来会变成 run-on sentence → 大写} ~~Large amounts~~ amounts of plastic waste are dumped into oceans every year, where animals ^{看起来像例子, 但其实只是泛泛说明 → extended explanation} such as turtles and fish either mistake it for food ^{food 后面加个表情?} or become trapped in it. This often leads to injury or death, disrupting entire ecosystems.

Furthermore, plastic does not easily decompose and can remain in the environment for hundreds of years. ^{这两句的逻辑关系是什么?} Therefore, instead of banning plastic immediately, ~~govern~~ [governments can first reduce single-use plastics step by step, such as limiting plastic straws and bags. In this way, people can slowly adapt while pollution is reduced.] You don't need to provide solution !!!

论点 $\Rightarrow$ 很好
Plastic should ~~also~~ be limited because it has harmful effects on human health. ~~Microplastics~~ ^{解释1: 哪里有微塑料} have been found in drinking water, seafood, and even the air, making it almost impossible for people to avoid exposure. ^{解释2: 微塑料进入体会怎样} When these tiny particles enter the human body, they may cause health problems over time. [To address this issue gradually, practical measures can be introduced, such as charging for plastic ~~bags~~ bags, encouraging the use of reusable cloth bags, and offering discounts to customers who bring their own cups when buying drinks.) These small changes can effectively reduce plastic use without causing major inconvenience.] $\Rightarrow$ 题目无问 "solution" !!!

In conclusion, plastic pollution not only damages ecosystems but also ^{Wow} poses risks to human health. Therefore, plastic use should be reduced gradually through practical measures, so that society can move towards a more sustainable future without losing the convenience that plastic provides.

Introduction

写得中规中矩，结构正确，表达清晰。

Body Paragraph 1

Large amounts of plastic waste are dumped into oceans every year, where animals such as turtles and fish either mistake it for good or become trapped in it.

Large amounts of plastic waste are dumped into oceans every year, where animals such as turtles and fish either mistake it for food or become trapped in it.

① good→food

拼写错误，粗心!

②论述段的结构:

P - Point → E - Elaboration → E - Example → P/L - Point/Link back

Forrest 文章的分析部分逻辑也不够通顺

Forrest 逻辑:

plastic waste → oceans → animals affected → ecosystems disrupted

↑只是在描述过程，但没有解释为什么这说明污染“很严重”↑

Forrest 要写的是：污染具体是怎么发生的？严重在哪里？

③ Forrest 文章缺少的是“E - Example”

这句看着像包含了例子，但只是在泛泛而谈。

一个好的 supporting example 包含:

*有具体对象

*有情境

*有画面感

一起写 (HW):

一起写:

Furthermore, plastic does not easily decompose and can remain in the environment for hundreds of years.

However, plastic is widely used in daily life and there are not enough alternatives. (对应下面解释的内容)

Therefore, instead of banning plastic immediately, government can first reduce single-use plastic step by step, such as limiting plastic straws and bags. In this way, ...

虽然文章不要求写 solution, 但是我们趁热打铁练习一下~

Forrest 逻辑:

塑料降解很慢 → 问题很严重 → 不能马上禁止 → 应该逐步减少

BUT

为什么不能立即禁止？这么严重不是应该尽快甚至马上禁止吗？

Forrest 有时候逻辑太跳跃了，中间省略了很多没解释的内容，文章就变得很难读懂了。

更合理的逻辑：

塑料很难降解 (问题严重) → 但塑料在生活中非常重要 (难以替代+依赖) → 所以不能马上禁止，只能逐步减少。

... government can first reduce single-use plastics step by step... In this way, people can adapt while pollution is reduced.

题目如下：

Exercise 6
14 In class, you discussed whether plastic products should be limited in daily life.
Here are some comments from your classmates:

题目只是问 Forrest 对于 limit 塑料的立场，并没有让 Forrest 提供解决办法。

Forrest 应该花更多笔墨写关于塑料导致污染的例子。

Body Paragraph 2

① 和 Body Paragraph 1 一样，不需要写 solution。

② 缺少一个例子

worked tirelessly to tag the birds, carefully attaching small tracking devices to their legs in order to follow their movements. Planning the migration route required patience and precision, as she had to rely on limited data. However, her work was filled with challenges. She faced a serious lack of funding, forcing her to use basic equipment. The harsh weather made conditions even worse, as her tent was destroyed by strong winds. On top of that, the birds were difficult to catch, and she often struggled alone in the cold and remote environment.

Lotta soon realised she needed help to continue her research, and that was where Ennis ^{→ became essential to the project} came in. As an experienced captain, he was the only person capable of taking her far south across dangerous waters. His fishing vessel ^{made it possible for her / gave her the means} ~~provided the access~~ she needed to follow the birds' long migration route. At first, Ennis refused, believing the journey had no purpose. However, Lotta's determination and the tracking evidence she showed him slowly changed his mind. Seeing the movement of the birds on the map reminded him of the past, when the seas were still full of life, and this convinced him to help her.

In the end, the journey changed both of them deeply. For Lotta, the discovery of a hidden sanctuary confirmed her beliefs and strengthened her hope for the future. For Ennis, the experience restored his sense of wonder and ^{made him see the natural world differently again} (shifted his outlook on life). Together, they now aim to protect these fragile ecosystems, raise awareness about environmental destruction, and inspire others to take action before it is too late.

Before the journey, Lotta spent weeks preparing on her own.

逻辑正确，但细不对

原文写的是 day 而不是 week 哦!

I grin, thrilled. I've been out here for days, pecked a dozen times, but have now tagged three terns. My tent was blown into the sea last night. My cheap rental car's blessedly warm.

“came in” 比较口语，而且有点模糊

“这时候他就出现了” or “这个时候他发挥作用了”?

Before the journey, Lotta spent days preparing on her own.

(Paragraph 3)

... that was where Ennis became essential to the project.

New Writing Task (Text C) - In-class Practising

Text C: Wanaka

Tony has been travelling the world doing seasonal work for the past year and has just started a new job working as a liftie (ski-lift attendant) for the first time near Wanaka, New Zealand.

Training commenced with a slideshow about every different job at the fashionable resort, presumably to underline the fact that we'd got the worst of the outdoor ones. Indoor employees, personal chefs and private ski-instructors lodged free on-site; 'outsiders' battled for reasonably priced accommodation with hordes of backpackers travelling through; wealthier guests stayed in the hotels.

5

Everyone was asking questions I didn't understand. 'What about rules on quick-laps?' 'What's the back-country policy?' 'How deep's the base?' 'How much snow do you make?' I was clearly in over my head. Again! This time in snow, which gave the appearance of being soft – but which, as any snow-sports fanatic will tell you, was more dangerous than it looked.

Here are the answers:

- No 'quick-laps' in week one. Apparently, they're a trick used by experienced lifties who take turns to run the lift they're working on – each person doing two people's jobs, while their partner takes the lift to the top and skis or snowboards back down again. It's a great way to get a sneaky bit of extra riding in, and generally overlooked by bosses – providing each person crewing the lift is capable of running it on their own. I wasn't.
- 'Back-country' was everything outside the marked boundaries of the ski-area (avoided for fear of avalanches).
- The base (snow-depth) was two metres, sometimes rising to four (requiring much digging-out of cars and buildings).
- 'Snow' was 'made' nightly. Gigantic cannons shot this granular substance skywards ensuring the mountain could be open for skiing whether it snowed naturally overnight or not.

Our Lift Supervisor ('Boss') marched us around every lift in the ski-field. 'So now you know the lifts,' he informed us. 'See you all bright and early tomorrow!'

And that was it: training was over! I'd never pushed a button, had only the flimsiest concept how a ski lift even worked, much less how to fix one if something went wrong, didn't know how to test the equipment, use the radio in case of emergency or assist guests on and off the lift. Ski lifts spin all day, every hour transporting skiers and riders of all ability levels up the mountain. I didn't know how many things I didn't know about my new job – but suspected there were plenty.

Next morning, we assembled indoors, armed ourselves for combat and headed out again. Our opponents were the lift chairs, which overnight had turned into fantastic frozen sculptures. Relentless weather, coupled with dramatically sub-zero temperatures, transformed these humble steel and wooden frames into a series of massive ice-monoliths, layered and carved by snow and wind into intricate abstract shapes. They were breathtakingly beautiful, and a pain to clear before we could ride them to our allocated stations at given points up the (inventively named) Giant Ski Slope.

35

Walking back down from there took forever – experienced lifties snowboarded. It got cold up top; when the weather closed in, I'd sit shivering in my tiny control-booth, fantasising about life as a cleaner inside the ski-rental building. 40

One Wednesday, rumour had it we'd be closing early. Halfway up Giant Ski Slope, it seemed mildly surprising we hadn't already. The wind was raging, buffeting chairs and customers alike. All afternoon a slushy drizzle had been slowly working its way through my layers. The bus back from the mountain crawled out of the car park and attempted the descent, but it was a total white-out. The huge windscreen filled with snow faster than the wipers could clear it. We crunched into the uphill side of the mountain and stuck there. Gusts of wind, revealing and concealing the narrow road ahead, confirmed that drifts of snow had blocked it completely. Our driver radioed in to report our situation; we waited. 45

At 02:45, I staggered, still soaked to the skin, chilled, and exhausted, into my room.

'That was nothing!' crowed Boss the next day. 50
'You should've been here for the Great Storm ...'
