Nowadays, there are different views on whether companies should hire people with disabilities.

with disabilities.

① differing 和 different 的语法都正确

② differing 和 different 的区别

*different = 不同的 -> 强调“彼此不一样”

*differing = 存在分歧的 / 有差异的 -> 非常非常正式、书面

*differing views 的 collocation (搭配) 不如 different views 高频

Some believe everyone deserves equal job opportunities, while others argue that it may not be practical due to increased costs.

Some people believe that everyone deserves equal job opportunities, while others argue that it may not be practical due to increased costs.

① “Some believe” 更多用于新闻报道 -> 为了压缩篇幅，特别是新闻标题

② Some people believe that -> 更自然的表达

*Forrest 非常喜欢省略（显高级？），但不建议

For example, many have developed strong problem-solving abilities and resilience through overcoming challenges.

For example, many people have developed strong problem-solving skills and resilience through overcoming difficulties in daily life.

① many have developed -> 和 introduction 同理，太省略了

② problem-solving skills 比 problem-solving abilities 更常见

③ 对于 “people with disabilities”，他们面临的更多是 “difficulties”，而不是

“challenges”

(The purpose of this journal entry is to record today's events during our final mission on Mars, where we are searching for signs of life.) → eventually discovered water and possible evidence of life.
Today, the team set out to explore the final site of our mission. Bob stayed in the rover to manage communication, while Rajah and Sarah went out to collect samples. However, instead of working together, they argued and seemed more focused on competing with each other. → about what?? → the desire for recognition
This made the situation tense and unproductive.
At first, I felt cautious about the mission because it was our last chance. As the arguments continued, I felt frustrated and disappointed ^{→ by the team's lack of cooperation} in the team. Fortunately, Bob decided to work alone, and his efforts led to the discovery of water, which later showed evidence of life. By the end, I felt amazed, proud and relieved that we had finally achieved something significant.

In my opinion, Bob showed strong ^{→ what qualities?} qualities as a team member. He was calm, focused, professional, and reliable, especially when he ^{chose} chose to work independently and still achieved success. On the other hand, ^{Rajah} Raja and Sarah were too competitive and distracted by the idea of fame, which affected their teamwork. Life on Mars is not easy. The living conditions are basic, and space is very limited. However, it is still manageable if everyone cooperates and works together properly.

After hearing the news about the discovery, I ^{chose to} contacted Bob directly because I trusted his judgment and professionalism. I asked him to confirm the results to ensure the findings were accurate.

 Looking ahead, I hope we can continue investigating the possibility of life on ~~mar~~ Mars in ~~more~~ detail. I also hope the ~~te~~ team can improve their cooperation and focus on the mission instead of personal competition. Finally, I wish for better living conditions to make our time on Mars safer and more comfortable.

New Writing Task (Text C) - In-class Practising

Text C: The business venture

Damian and Abdul were school friends. As adults, they have gone into business together.

Tuesday evening, driving the van home, Damian laughs in pleasure.

'Sold out in one morning. Brilliant work for our very first day at the market! I'll try some new ranges and we can take double to sell next week.'

Abdul does not share Damian's optimism. 'We don't want to go too quickly, and the van freezer isn't very big,' he cautions.

A few months earlier, Damian and Abdul had been relaxing in Damian's field, near his beehives. It had been the first mild morning for many months and the two men were sipping Damian's home-made acacia honey and berry smoothies.

The delicate tracery of acacia leaves cast a dancing dappled shade over the beehives. A worker bee, one of the first to venture uncertainly out of the hive that morning, drew dizzy spirals in the air, as it orientated itself, sensing the nectar in the newly budding flowers. Damian could faintly hear the drones inside the hive humming in reverential attendance on their queen. He looked up. Any day now those acacia trees would burst into flower and cascades of clustered white blossom would turn the trees silver. Then this solitary worker would be accompanied by hundreds of other labourers, all intent on drinking their fill of nectar.

'I agree with that little bee,' announced Damian, smacking his lips in pleasure at the taste of honey and berries. 'We should venture out of our own hives and taste the sweet nectar of life. Get ahead of the crowd. Nice big shop in the middle of town.'

'All the online advice is that small businesses should start slowly. No risk-taking. Trying it out just once a week in the local market is best,' replied Abdul.

'There isn't another smoothie store in town, and no one who makes smoothies like I do!' Damian protested.

A few weeks later, Damian conceded defeat when Abdul showed him his painstaking work. 'My survey suggests that people in the town like smoothies, but they are not prepared to pay too high a price for them. We need to encourage them to try ours.'

Facts and figures didn't interest Damian. He wandered into the house to continue working on his smoothie ranges. All his creations were conventionally sweet: cherries, pineapples and strawberries blended with the bees' acacia honey, lumps of ice and different milks. He wanted to diversify.

A worker bee swung through the kitchen window and settled momentarily by the honey jar. It started to carefully probe droplets of honey that had puddled on the work top, smiling to itself in self-congratulatory glee. 'What shall I turn my talents to next?' Damian asked the bee. The bee's segmented antennae rotated through a full 90 degrees, and then folded outwards, as if in a quizzical hand gesture. Its gossamer wings reclined, and a contemplative silence consumed the kitchen. 'You're no help!' reprimanded Damian playfully.

Damian returned to Abdul. 'How about a savoury range?' he suggested. 'I was thinking of pizza ...'

Abdul didn't answer. He was looking thoughtful. 'We could put a few of those cherry ones on special offer to attract buyers. I've also been looking at the amount of packaging we plan to use and whether it is eco-friendly. And we need a portable freezer and a big van.'

40

Damian smiles, remembering back to that conversation. He parks the van and observes the beehives. A huge swarm of bees flies over the top and up towards the acacia tree.

Abdul watches too. 'I guess we could have rivals if other people realise how successful our business is.'

'Then we should think bigger and get ahead. A shop that is open every day of the week. I could live there.'

'But then who would look after your bees?' asks Abdul, as the two men contemplate the crowds of tiny golden bodies intent on pursuing their own businesses in the white blossom.
