Outdoor Learning is More Beneficial ~~for~~ for Students.

Nowadays, many schools are ~~dis~~ discussing whether students should learn outside the classroom more often, such as in museums or public places. Some people support this idea, while others believe traditional classroom learning is better. In my opinion, outdoor learning is more beneficial for students.

Firstly, students can understand lessons more effectively through real experiences. In classrooms, students usually learn from textbooks and slides, which can sometimes be difficult to imagine. However, visiting museums or historical places allows students to see real objects and examples. For instance, science students can observe experiments directly in the museum instead of only reading about them in text. This helps students remember information more clearly and improves their understanding of the subject.

As a result, students are more likely to remember information and develop a deeper understanding of the subject.

Secondly, outdoor learning makes education more enjoyable and motivating. ^{for students} Many students ^{become less interested in learning} feel ~~bored~~ bored when they stay in the same classroom every day. Learning in different environments can increase students' interest and encourage them to participate actively in lessons. Furthermore, outdoor activities ~~also~~ improve communication and teamwork skills because students often work together during trips and projects. Example?

In conclusion, ^(I) schools should encourage outdoor learning more frequently, because it benefits students both academically and social. ~~be encouraged more often in schools.~~ It not only improves students' understanding but also makes learning more interesting and ~~meaning~~ meaningful.

Introduction

Nowadays, many schools are discussing whether students should learn outside the classroom more often, such as in museums or public places.

① public places

*范围太大了, 要写一个像 museum 一样的具体内容

*包含了 museums

Some people support this idea while others believe traditional classroom learning is better.

learning is better.

Punctuation (标点符号) 也算 language accuracy

Forrest 不要小看标点符号的作用！这里的 while 是逻辑连接词，前后连接两个完整的句子；缺少了逗号就变成一个病句了。

Body Paragraph 1

Firstly, students can understand lessons more effectively through real experiences.

Firstly, students can understand concepts more effectively through real experiences.

“understand lessons” -> Chinglish

具体指的是 lesson 的什么呢？

In classrooms, students usually learn from textbooks and slides, which can sometimes be difficult to imagine.

In classrooms, students usually learn from textbooks and slides, which ~~can~~ sometimes be (+ is can make some concepts) difficult to imagine (+ clearly).

① “difficult to imagine”是 imagine 什么呢？ -> 有点模糊

For instance, science students can observe experiments directly instead of only reading about them.

For instance, students who study science can observe experiments directly (+ in the museum) instead of only reading about them (+in texts).

① “science students” -> 也很 Chinglish

② “observe experiments directly” 和 “only reading about them”

以上两个场景可以加入方式：博物馆和课本，突出对比

This helps students remember information more clearly and improves their understanding of the subject.

As a result, students are more likely to remember information and develop a deeper understanding of the subject.

原句没语法问题，但是修改后的句子更加学术和正式。

“PEEP”中的最后一个 P, Forrest 可以参考

“as a result, xxx is/are more likely to xxx” 作为开头的写法

Body Paragraph 2

Secondly, outdoor learning makes education more enjoyable and motivating.

Secondly, outdoor learning makes education more enjoyable and motivating for students.

对谁来说更 enjoyable 和 motivating? 可以写得具体

Many students feel bored when they stay in the same classroom every day.

Many students become less interested in learning when they stay in the same classroom every day.

“feel bored”有点随意啦, 可以写的更加 formal

Furthermore, outdoor activities also improve communication and teamwork skills because students often work together during trips and projects.

“Furthermore” 和 “also” -> 意思重复, 保留一个即可

Conclusion

In conclusion, I strongly believe that outdoor learning should be encouraged more often in schools.

socially.

Forrest 可以减少写 “I” 的频率，因为这样可以加强文章的客观性。

Journal Entry

Today was our first day selling smoothies at the market, and to my surprise, we sold out before lunchtime. (Damaris was delighted and immediately started talking about doubling production next week.)

Although I felt proud of what we achieved, I also felt nervous. I know success can make people confident, and I do not want us to rush into things too quickly. Starting a business is exciting, but it also comes with responsibilities and risks that cannot be ignored.

Before we started the business, I believed the most important thing was to begin carefully. I spent a long time ^{doing research on} searching small businesses and ^{carrying} out surveys to understand what customers wanted. I discovered that people like smoothies, ~~but~~ but only if the prices stayed affordable. I also thought practical issues were important, such as having enough freezer space, reliable transport and eco-friendly ~~packaging~~. To attract customers, I suggested special offers instead of charging high prices ~~immediately~~.

In my opinion, testing the business once a week at the market was much safer than opening a shop straight ~~away~~.

Working with Damian has both advantages and ~~disadvantages~~.

He is creative, energetic and full of ~~confidence~~. His smoothie recipes are ~~not~~ unique, and he is always inventing new flavours and ~~ideas~~. Without his enthusiasm, the business would probably never have started. However, ~~Damian~~ Damian ^{is also} can also ~~be~~ be impatient and ^{sometimes} unrealistic. He ~~ignores~~ ^{sometimes} facts and figures because he believes success will happen naturally. Sometimes I ^{worry?} ~~sorry~~ that he wants to expand too quickly. Still, our partnership works because he believes

~~wants to expand too quickly.~~ Still, our partnership works because we balance ~~each other.~~ He brings ~~creativity~~ creativity while I focus on organisation and careful ~~planning.~~ Even so, our different personalities sometimes cause tension, and I hope business problems will not damage our ~~friendship.~~
 Looking ahead, I can see the business growing ~~successfully.~~ We may eventually need a larger van, a portable freezer or even a permanent smoothie ~~shop?~~ ~~soup?~~ Damian already wants to introduce more flavours, including savoury smoothies ~~shop?~~ ~~shop.~~ However, I also have concerns about competition, financial pressure and losing control as the business ~~expands.~~ Success is exciting, but I hope we remember why we started this business in the ~~first~~ place.

太多抄写错误了！这里统一列出来：

1. I do not want us to rush into things to quickly. -> I do not want us to rush into things too quickly. (P1)
2. Sometimes I sorry that he wants to expand too quickly. -> Sometimes I sorry that he wants to expand too quickly. (P3) 后面又抄了一句？！
3. He ignores facts and figures because he believes success will happen naturally. (P3) 后面又抄了一句? !

4. ... a portable freezer or even a permanent smoothie soup. -> ... a portable freezer or even a permanent smoothie shop. (P4)

5. ... including savoury smoothie shop. -> ... including savoury smoothie

shop. (P4) 又抄到上面一行了? !

Paragraph 2

Before we started the business, I believed the most important thing was to begin carefully.

I spent a long time doing research on small businesses and carrying out surveys to understand what customers wanted.

① 做研究 -> do research on

② searching (原文) 和 carry 是和 spent 一起的, 所以统一用 ing 形式

New Writing Task (Text C) - In-class Practising

Text C: In the company of wolves

The writer is a journalist who is reviewing an unusual stay at Aurora Park in the north of Norway.

I drive past piled-up snow and stop by the darkened log cabin. No one comes out of 'Reception'. I check the park's website on my phone: 'Experience Arctic nature up close. Live amongst our rare semi-wild wolves at the ultra-exclusive Wolf Lodge. Revel in the unique feeling of being watched by curious amber eyes; be part of a new story for these marvellous, mythical, misunderstood creatures ...'

I extinguish the car lights and step out into the freezing air just as a snowplough comes up the road, driven by my 'devoted host' and 'wildlife expert', Head Keeper, Stig Hansen.

'Follow me in your car,' Stig says softly. 'At the top, when we get out, don't make sudden movements or noises.'

The snowploughed track leads us between two reassuringly high fences trimmed with electric wire. I leave the car by a gate in the fence, beyond which a tunnel leads up to a brightly lit lodge on a small snowy hill. The purpose of that tunnel, I know, is to access the lodge without the inhabitants of the enclosure accessing me.

10

Then the howling starts: a long primeval cry that reaches deep into the mind, evoking shivers of excitement. An answering howl draws Stig's attention, 'Sometimes I think there are not just ours out there.'

15

From the edge of extinction wolves are making a comeback in Europe, bringing with them a cascade of biodiversity and environmental health. Stig's team monitors wolves living in some of the largest enclosures among animal parks in the world. His wolf visits were established to ensure better welfare for wolves in captivity, and to offer humans a unique, life-changing experience. Many wolves in captivity, unfamiliar with people, are fearful, and live in stressful conditions. Many people fear wolves. The wolves at Aurora Park are accustomed to human contact and enjoy human company as part of their natural environment.

20

Dedicated animal keepers guide you into the enclosure, where you will meet these extraordinary creatures of fairy tales face to face. That's why I am here: to join a group staying the night inside the wolf enclosure in this secluded valley and, hopefully, make contact. I say hopefully as no matter the eye-watering expense of the experience, wolves, it seems, are not to be relied upon.

25

'Be very slow and steady,' Stig reminds us, lighting the fire to prepare supper. 'Wolves can get excited. We don't allow under-18s to meet them. If the wolves knock you over, keep calm and wait for the keepers to move them away.'

30

From inside the plush mountain lodge, I've been promised a view of the Northern Lights. I peer out of the large viewing windows. As my eyes adjust to the night, I see a green glow: at first just smudges that grow, forming a cosmic phantom that flutters, swirls and moves mysteriously across the vast sky. Surfacing from the depths of the darkness we hear a sudden, vicious wolf-fight. 'Siblings working out their hierarchy,' says Stig casually. 'We don't interfere.' We finish dinner in eerie silence, gazing at a shimmering white moon – silhouetted against it are the swift shadows of running wolves.

35

Next morning, emboldened by a hearty breakfast, Stig and I venture out and immediately spot the wolf pack loping eagerly towards us. They jump up excitedly, licking our faces. Two of them have a snarling stand-off over who should lick me first but then agree to lick my camera instead. Apart from that one moment, it's all remarkably non-threatening. We stroll to a low snow-covered hill where they do a bit of a howl and hold a wrestling contest. Only when I drop my phone is there a sudden intimation of what can happen. They are instantly curious and pushy, flooded with predatory instincts and the power of the pack. Moving slowly, I retrieve my phone and retreat to a respectful distance. Cute they may be, but cuddly toys they are not.
